Ending national restrictions to boost EU economic recovery

Wednesday 26 May 2021, 12.00-13.30

Hosted by Thomas Reynaert, Managing Director, Airlines for Europe

Virtual Venue – ECPA Members only

Air travel is a crucial enabler of economic activity in Europe, directly affecting the wider tourism industry, businesses across most sectors of the economy, and job creation. Even a small increase in air travel can bring substantial socio-economic benefits, especially in areas of Europe affected by high youth unemployment. The connectivity provided by the European transport network provides a crucial conduit for trade, tourism and economic growth.

One year into the COVID-19 pandemic, we continue to be faced with diverging national requirements, often introduced at very short notice. A number of European associations, including A4E, representing the aviation sector have called for a truly coordinated approach among European Member States, providing transparency and predictability for citizens and businesses.

Thomas Reynaert (MD, A4E) will introduce this topic, highlighting the advocacy strategy and the challenges related to the effort. Other industries will contribute to this ECPA members-only discussion and share best practices from their sector.
